

The students figured out that laser light (monochromatic) cannot be separated any further.

The students are using a prism to separate white light from different sources.

Students noticed that the infrared area has the highest temperature.

The students are measuring the temperature of the different parts of the light spectrum.